The Fact Remains

No amount of misrepresentation by the peddlers of alum baking powders, no juggling with chemicals, or pretended analysis, or cooked-up certificates, or falsehoods of any kind, can change the fact that

HER FIRST BERRIES

By SUSANNA GLENN.

Anthony Owen trusted devoutly that he had succeeded in covering his tracks behind him. Who would think of his coming to this old retreat where he used to hide and work before success had begun to smile in his direction.

"This certainly looks first rate," Anthony acknowledged, looking over the tiny garden from the back porch. "I cannot see that the place has changed at all in the past ten years except that those trees along the border have responded to the mulching we gave them."

"It's all just the same, sir," agreed the owner, "only that I've rented the cottage back of you, at last. That place has been a dead loss to me these ten years back, and I was mighty pleased when this young woman came and took a notion to it. I suppose you would rather have it empty, but Miss Carson seems a quiet little person and not over neighborly so far, so I reckon you'll get along all right."

During the week that followed, Owen enjoyed himself with a thoroughness that increased whenever he thought of his Aunt Harriet. "I'll show her," he said at such moments, "that there is a limit even to her generalship in my affairs."

The little woman in the adjoining garden he first began noticing because she so completely ignored him. "She's trying to clean up that garden herself," he discovered one day. "Pity old Jones could not do it for her—he would not dare impose on a man that way."

"But I would not let Mr. Jones fix it," she explained when he at last vouchsafed his opinion of Jones, neighborhood fashion, across the dividing hedge. "I wish to do it myself. Do you think I have improved it at all?"

"You have certainly done wonders. But you're not pruning those roses right—you will ruin them that way. Here, let me show you."

There was a little green gate in the hedge which opened complacently upon a disused hinged. "They need spraying and a mulch," was his verdict, upon closer examination of the straggling roses. "I'll lend you some books on gardening if you care for them."

When Owen returned to his own garden an hour later, he carried a very pleasant impression of a girl with a perfectly natural manner, rather plain of face, and wearing a print dress well suited to her occupation of digging in the dark soil. "Now there," he soliloquized in deep satisfaction, "is a girl one might enjoy having for a neighbor. She seems unusually intelligent and sensible."

Beyond a doubt Ruth Carson proved to be a good neighbor. She read the garden books with avidity, relied with a flattering confidence upon her neighbor's opinion on all garden topics, and worked with that abandon born of real love of all growing things.

"I think you deserve a special treat for what you have done for my garden," she announced one sultry afternoon, bringing into the delapidated arbor where they had been resting, dishes of some tempting frozen concoction. "These are the first berries from my vines and I made the cream myself, so do not dare criticize it!"

"All—surely you do not mean you turned the crank?"

For the answer she opened her hand, showing the blisters on the pink palm. "You should not have done it," he objected, impatiently. "Why did you not call me?"

"Indeed I should not trouble you in any such way," she retorted, with a formality that angered him unreasonably. "What is there about this Ruth Carson that seems different from other girls?" he questioned himself daily.

For he it known that Anthony Owen, in spite of his fine height and intellectual achievements, was an extremely bashful man. "She doesn't demand attentions like the girls Aunt Harriet is so fond of bringing out for my benefit." And he grinned broadly at thought of Aunt Harriet and her delayed matrimonial schemes. "For I shall have to go home after a while and face the music," he admitted reluctantly.

"Mr. Owen," said his neighbor as they sat in her garden enjoying the roses that had responded to their united efforts at restoration. "I've been wondering about you—you seem so strong, so full of life, and yet you go out so little. I cannot understand why you are contented to your tiny garden."

"I am not contented in my own garden, young lady," he smiled. "But I do not dare go out; you see, I am in hiding!"

"Are you, truly? Is not that the strangest thing for so an I, myself." "Suppose you let me tell you. It is not really so bad as it sounds. I'm simply hiding from Aunt Harriet. She—you see, she's determined to marry me off!"

The girl laughed out merrily. "And you ran away? Is not that rather—not very brave, you know?"

"I'm not brave when it comes to girls, though I am not exactly a coward in other respects. I've never cared much for girls, some way. My life has been pretty full of good, hard work, and I never learned the ways women seem to like. I never know what to say to them," he admitted, resignedly.

"But you have been so nice to me," she said, "I should never dream that you were bashful, Mr. Owen. And surely, you cannot remain here forever?"

"No, she has found me out. She threatens to come down here and bring the girl with her if I do not come home. Is your trouble as serious as that, Miss Carson?"

"Oh, much, much worse than that," she answered seriously. "I ran away from the kindest people in the world. I wanted a home so much, a home where I could do things—make beds and wash the dishes and dig in the garden, do you understand?"

Finding an Old Crown.

A recent severe storm at Cracow, the old capital of Poland, now an Austrian city and fortress, uprooted an ancient elm, and revealed the hiding place of the crown worn by the kings of Poland. The crown dates back to the fourteenth century and has been lost since the middle of the eighteenth century. Some of the magnificent gems in the crown had fallen out but all were recovered.

A Bird With Hands.

In the forests of British Guiana, says the London Globe, lives the hoactzin, a singular bird, whose young possess a free claw at the end of each wing, which they use almost as the monkey uses his hands in tree-climbing.

The nest of the hoactzin is in a tree overhanging the water, and the young unlike most birds, are active from the first. The outermost quill feathers of the wing, which might hamper the free use of the claws, do not grow much until the rest of the wing is strong enough to make climbing less necessary. Then they grow, out, and the claws are absorbed. The adult bird does not need them. Should a young hoactzin fall into the water, it makes for the shore and seizes a branch, up which it quickly climbs.

A Pocket Wireless Receiver. A pocket wireless telegraphy receiver in the form of a small telephone which needs no apparatus of posts and antennae has been presented to the French Astronomical Society by an engineer, M. Justin Laroche. This instrument, which slips with ease into the coat pocket, has only to be brought into contact with any metallic surface, such as an iron railing, a brass curtain rail, or the metal fittings of a motor car, to enable a listener in Paris to hear the time signals from the Eiffel Tower.

Thirty miles from Paris an ordinary spade stuck in the ground forms a receiving station adequate to catch a wireless message, while a telegraph pole with its wires will serve the same purpose at a distance of over 650 miles.

Prayers for a Horse.

A young curate, but very shy and bashful, came into a parish which was occupied by Yorkshire yeoman who bred horses and rode them and sometimes had steeplechases. He did not get on, and was very much depressed.

One day the clerk said to him: "If you please, sir, the prayers of the church are desired for Lucy Gray."

"Very well," said the curate, and at every service in which the prayer for all sorts and conditions of men was offered, the church was asked to pray for Lucy Gray, till one morning the clerk rushed into the vestry and said: "You needn't pray for Lucy Gray any more; she's won the steeplechase."

"Have I been praying for a horse?" asked the curate. "I shall leave the place."

But the clerk said: "You'll do now of the sort, sir; I thought little of ye when ye came, but now ye've got the hearts of them all, and ye can do what ye like in the parish since ye took to having prayed for that horse."
